

Missouri's non-farm employment will increase 11.2 percent between 1998 and 2008, creating over 300,000 new jobs. This growth is slower than during the previous 10-year period, 1988-1998 when growth was 18.6 percent and Missouri gained an additional 420,000 jobs. This slowdown mirrors the slowdown expected at the national level.

The service-producing sector will remain the dominant source of employment over the projection period. It will increase 13.7 percent between 1998 and 2008 and account for 81 percent of the total employment in 2008 (see chart 1). All the major divisions in this sector are expected to increase (see chart 2). The goods-producing sector is expected to increase slightly over the projections period, growing by 1.3 percent. Construction is the only major division in this sector that is expected to undergo a notable increase.

Mining

Mining employment is expected to change very little over the projection period. Metal mining employment is expected to decrease. Employment in metal mining has been on a downward trend for many years due in part to stricter environmental regulations. But offsetting the decrease in metal mining is a projected increase in nonmetallic quarrying, which provides raw material for the construction industry.

Construction

Employment in the construction division is expected to increase 12.9 percent, a gain of 16,300 jobs. This division is the most sensitive to economic cycles, benefiting from a strong economy and suffering during downturns.

Population growth, including an increase in older adults, should lead to continued growth in the construction and remodeling of single-family and multi-family dwellings, apartments, and assisted living housing. Growth in retail trade and demand for services such as health care, education, and recreation should lead to continued growth in nonresidential building construction and remodeling. Special trade contractors closely linked to building construction and remodeling should also continue to grow. The need to upgrade and replace highways and bridges will be a factor in the employment growth in heavy construction. Growth in suburban areas surrounding the state's larger cities may also contribute to the growth in heavy construction employment.

Manufacturing

For several years, manufacturing employment in the state has been declining. During the previous 10-year period (1988-1998), manufacturing employment declined annually at 0.4 percent losing about 16,600 jobs. Between 1998 and 2008 employment in manufacturing should continue to shrink though at a slower rate of 0.2 percent per year, losing an additional 9,100 jobs.

Durable goods manufacturing employment is expected to lose about 6,200 jobs, a loss of 2.6 percent. Many of the durable goods industries will actually expand during the period. However, projected losses by some industries, particularly in electronic and electrical equipment (-1,070 jobs), and transportation equipment (-8,230 jobs), will more than offset those gains.

Non-durable goods manufacturing employment is also expected to decline, losing about 2,900 jobs. As in durable goods manufacturing, gains in many industries will be offset by large losses in others. Industries expected to be hardest hit are apparel and textile products (-4,480 jobs), chemicals and allied products (-1,980), and leather products (-1,060).

Transportation, Communication, & Utilities

The transportation, communication, and utilities division in Missouri should grow over the projection period. The expected growth of 8.0 percent translates to over 13,500 additional jobs between 1998 and 2008. This growth rate is significantly slower than the 14.7 percent of the previous 10-year period. Trucking and courier services (4,310 jobs), telephone communications (4,090), and freight transportation arrangement (920) are expected to lead this job growth. Railroad transportation (-500 jobs) and electric services (-440) should show the largest job losses.

Trade

Between 1998 and 2008 combined wholesale and retail trade employment in the state is projected to increase by over 60,800 jobs, a 9.6 percent increase. This increase accounts for about 20 percent of the total non-farm employment growth.

Wholesale trade alone is expected to increase by over 9,400 jobs, while retail trade should add

Largest Growth Industries

These ten industries will account for almost 52 percent of employment growth by 2008. Eight are in the services division.

Fastest Growing Industries

These ten industries are expected to grow rapidly, but the increase in the number of jobs for some of these industries may be small.

about 51,400 jobs. While most industries are expected to increase, the largest gains in wholesale trade should come from miscellaneous non-durable goods (1,700 jobs), paper and paper products (1,470), groceries (1,240), and drugs, proprietaries and sundries (1,210). In retail trade, 43 percent of projected growth should come from eating and drinking places (22,180 jobs). Other large gains should be found in department stores (6,880 jobs), miscellaneous shopping goods stores (3,340), and grocery stores (2,890).

Finance, Insurance, and Real Estate

This division should generate about 18,300 new jobs in Missouri over the projection period, an increase of 11.3 percent. The largest gains are expected to occur in security and commodity brokers and services (6,550 jobs), real estate (4,470), and non-depository institutions (3,430). Only savings institutions (-1,240 jobs) are expected to have a substantial decrease in employment.

Services

The services division is projected to generate almost 62 percent of the non-farm employment growth in the state. This translates to a job gain of over 185,000 between 1998 and 2008, a 19.1 percent increase. Over three-fourths of the new jobs are expected to come from four industry groups within the services division: business services (48,570 jobs), health services (40,810), educational services (35,640), and social services (17,890). Eight of the ten industries showing the largest growth fall within the services division (see chart 3).

Government, excluding Hospitals & Schools

Public sector employment in Missouri is expected to grow 7.4 percent from 1998 to 2008, adding almost 15,000 new jobs. This growth will result from increases in state and local government employment. Local government will grow faster (14.8 percent) and add over 13,500 jobs. State government is expected to generate almost 3,700 additional jobs by 2008. The federal government is expected to cut 3,200 jobs.
